

Dear tve friends and supporters,

2014 is a big year for us! It's thirty years since tve was founded with the goal of telling the big environment and development stories on TV. Today we still tell the big stories, and reach huge television audiences, but we're also enabling a remarkable range of new young filmmakers, animators, companies and communities to tell these same crucial stories in exciting, unexpected and captivating ways to an online audience of hundreds of thousands of viewers.

With best wishes,

Cheryl Campbell
 executive director

Winners triumph in tvebiomovies 2013

We've just completed the fourth, record-breaking year of tve's global environmental film competition, with 565 proposals from 75 countries. The 14 finalists, whose ambitious one-minute films vied for the top awards in seven categories, tackled the world's environmental challenges - from preserving indigenous crops to climate change and pollution. Our winners, from Bolivia, Cameroon, Colombia, Mauritius, Nepal, Peru and Slovakia, joined us via skype at January's award ceremony at the EBRD in central London.

Stop press!

It's all go for our new digital project in the Baltics, where nine local partners will use social media to find and implement solutions to the Baltic Sea's environmental crisis.

Kicking off our new documentary for global broadcast

As Brazil heads to the World Cup, tve looks beyond the glamour in a new 50-minute documentary commissioned by Al Jazeera for global broadcast. We've been following Rosamaria since she was born in 1992, as part of our Zero Ten Twenty series. She's grown up in grinding poverty in one of Rio's biggest favelas. We return to Brazil to ask: can Rosamaria forge a more hopeful future?

Films for change reaches the peaks of India

In partnership with Nokia, we've launched the second year of our highly successful Films for Change. We're expanding significantly, with film screenings and workshops in 15 of India's smaller cities, many in the northeast. Says tve's Chris Miller: 'We're making climate change relevant at the most local level, inspiring debate and community engagement.' The events culminate in a nationwide online film competition.

European and Chinese broadcasts for corporate sustainability awards

We're delighted to announce that London- and Beijing-based Propeller TV will be our broadcast partner for the tve Global Sustainability Film Awards 2014. Companies at the cutting edge of sustainability will again be able to share their innovations through entering the Awards from April. Thanks to last year's partnership with Propeller TV, television audiences throughout Europe had the chance to be inspired by the 2013 film entries.
